

Transcript of Heather's Story

One of the things that we've talked about, different friends and I, is that we are the first generation of people with disabilities that's lived this long, so they don't know what to expect as we age, it's different than the average person which means different health issues come up... I would like it if the doctors or nurses or technicians knew that I'm pretty independent and I like to do things for myself I may need some help with doing something like if there's several buttons on a shirt that need to be done up I might need assistance with that; those kinds of things. Not major things, but I guess they're outside their realm of their usual job description ... That's the problem in today's world where there's so few people and so much work then it seems like anything outside the realm of what they usually do is too much to ask.
