

Mount Sinai Hospital Incorporates Art into Healing

Hennick Family Wellness Gallery Opens for Patients and Families

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

July 19, 2016

(Toronto, ON) Unquestionably, there is a connection between the arts, humanities and overall health. In recognition of this, today Sinai Health System officially opened the Hennick Family Wellness Gallery at Mount Sinai Hospital.

The new space is a healing and respite area for patients, families and visitors surrounded by a collection of artwork by the late Canadian artist Sorel Etrog. The concept of a wellness gallery as a part of the healing process is based on extensive research demonstrating that stress and psychosocial factors can significantly affect patient health outcomes.

“The Hennick Family Wellness Gallery is as much a healing intervention as it is a beautiful space. Evidence shows that exposure to visual arts contributes to stress reduction, improved mood and sense of wellbeing. We know that there is no health without mental health, and the new Hennick Family Wellness Gallery is part of a holistic health approach that addresses body, person and soul,” says Molyn Leszcz, Chief, Psychiatry, Sinai Health System.

Located on the main floor of the hospital, the gallery is part of a renovated lobby area designed to strengthen the patient experience by offering a restorative space that is an intersection between art and wellness.

“From the inception of Sinai Health System, our aspiration has been to be the system leader to better serve our patients and community - from healthy beginnings to health aging. To enable this success we must have a healing environment that benefits our patients, their families and staff alike,” said Joseph Mapa, president and CEO, Sinai Health System. “Bridgepoint Active Healthcare, who was just recognized with a Governor General’s Medal for Architecture, is a testament to 21st century thinking on wellness how you can transform care through design. This is the standard for all of Sinai Health.”

The gallery space was 100 per cent donor funded through a generous gift by Jay and Barbara Hennick. The notable collection of Sorel Etrog artwork was bequeathed to the hospital by the artist in 2013.

About Mount Sinai Hospital:
