The minute a woman walks into our department her mental state is already altered. So for a woman who is already facing some challenges, some physical disabilities, it's even worse for them because they really don't know what they're going to face, what they're going to be able to do, is somebody going to get stressed out because of them, are they going to get upset because she can't do certain things? When I had my mammogram, I was stressed out. Even though I know that I work here and I know everything. So I can't really imagine how it must be for a woman who knows she can't do certain things already, to be in a situation where she's being asked to do things which are not possible.
